The Dutch have taken possession of one of the Philippine Islands, called Palmas.

News from Washington states that the Government "does not intend to protest, regarding the island as valuable." It was stated, also, "that aside from sentiment it made no difference whose floated there."

Can we believe our ears? What has become of all those lofty ideals with which we garlanded the Philippines? What has become of that noble duty which prevented our leaving those islands to their islanders for fear they would be seized by some other nation less benevolent than ourselves? What has become of those inspired motives which impelled us to rule the Filipinos against their will for their own good, denying the right of habeas corpus in order to teach them the art of self-government, inflicting the water cure to lure them into the sweetness of civilization? Where now is the white man's burden?

Are we to abandon our sacred wards on the island of Palmas to the sordid mercies of the Dutch because they are "valueless?" Are we to surrender these pupils of our democracy to the influences of a monarchy because they are "valueless?"

Has it all from the very beginning been nothing but cant? Is the white man's burden nothing but the brown man's purse?

Our Principal is a graduate of Eastman's Business College, N. Y.; attended Wofford College, S. C., and has had twenty-five years experience as an educator. For three years he was manager of the Rome Business College and Principal of the Business department. He has strong endorsement from business men, school officials and former students.

Upon the suggestion of one of his students, the following endorsement was prepared, and signed by his student at Marianna.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

This is to certify that we have attended the West Florida Business College and hereby endorse the Principal, Prof. G. V. Anderson, as an experienced, competent, faithful and attentive business college instructor. Prof. Anderson manifests a genuine interest in the welfare of his students, and while endeavoring to inspire ambition and to arouse interest, he has shown manifest kindness and consideration toward all under his instruction. May success crown his efforts wherever he may go.

Any city, or town is indeed fortunate in having a business college, and every citizen of Chipley and vicinity should not only patronize this institution, but should exert his influence in its behalf and actively co-operate in its upbuilding. It will be worth thousands of dollars to every graduate; many are soon enabled to command two to three times the amount of their former salary; besides the fact that their services during dull seasons are always in demand, while the unqualified and the untrained frequently have no employment. A business college will greatly add to our educational advantages; it will serve as an inducement for families to locate here; it will keep about two hundred dollars here for every student who would otherwise have to go elsewhere for such an education; it will enable young men and young women to get a business training at home who are not pecuniarily able to attend a college elsewhere; one hundred students would leave in this community something like THIRTY THOUSAND DOLLARS a year.

For twelve months credit is given deserving students who cannot pay cash.
